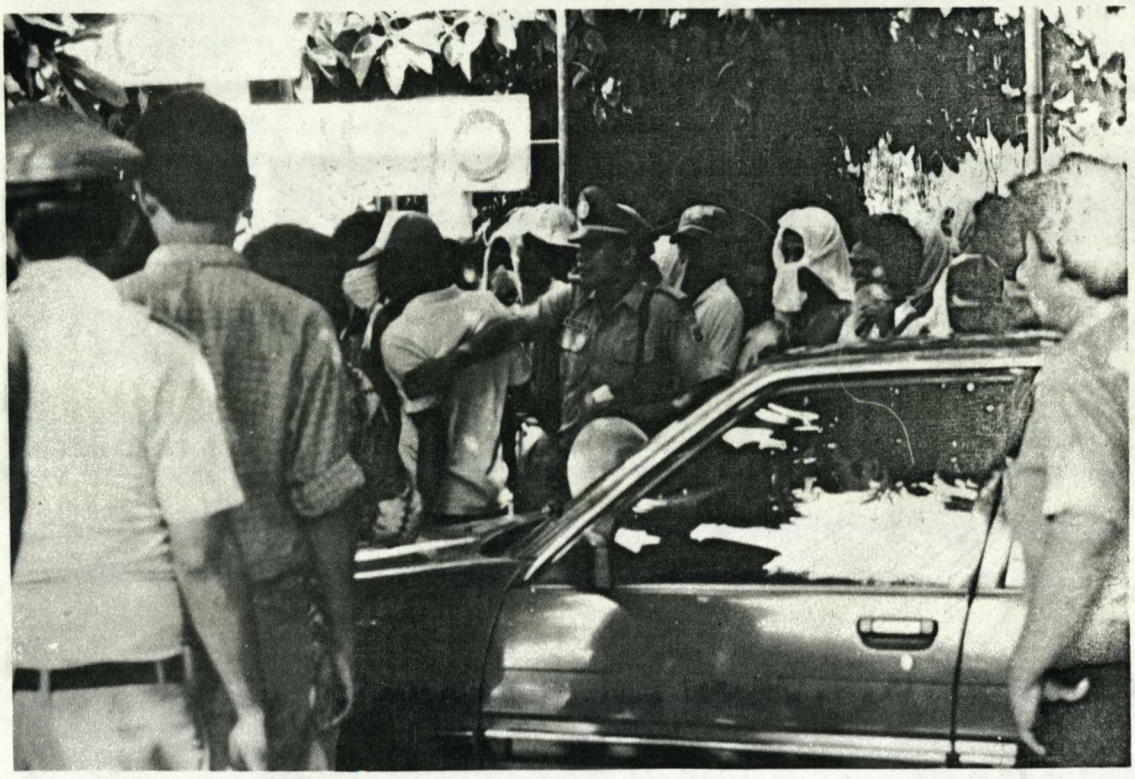
Peaceful demonstrators on balcony above courtyard of Hotel Turismo, Dili, East Timor.

Protesters speak to US Ambassador to Indonesia, John Monjo, through a bull-horn, while police and civilian authorities look on. A man in civilian clothes -- first from right -- records the dialogue with a tape recorder concealed in his shoulder-bag.



The crowd gathers round the car of US Ambassador John Monjo as it leaves the Hotel Turismo.

After the US Ambassador has left, riot police attack the protesters with batons. An automatic weapon, held by the barrel, baton-style is visible in the background, centre-left.

Protesters fall as they are beaten by security forces.

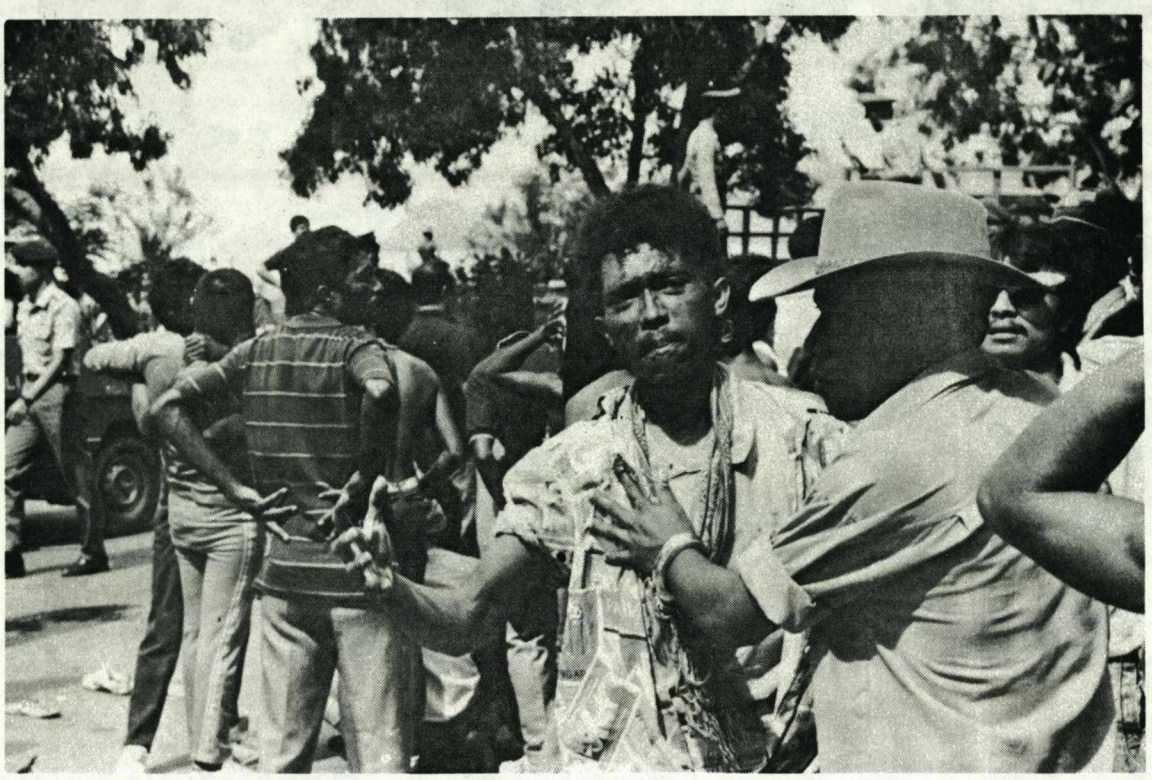
A young man attempts to flee the police attack, over the fence of the Hotel Turismo.

Protesters lie in a pile, some covering their heads for protection, while riot police stand with batons ready. An official in civilian dress -- centre-left -- surveys the scene.

Protesters remain in a pile, some of them protecting their heads, as a scuffle breaks out betwen an official in civilian dress and a riot policeman.

Protesters are allowed to stand up while two officials in civilian dress look on. One appears to be carrying a camera in his hand and a walkie-talkie in his shoulder-bag. The torso of a body is visible lying in the back of a police truck, in the top-left corner of the photograph.

Riot police board their trucks after the demonstration has been dispersed.



A protester appeals to the photographer, but is restrained by an official in civilian dress.
